AUTHOR. ACTIVIST. INFLUENCER

Skyy Banks is a native of Arkansas and a staunch advocate for HIV/AIDS awareness for women and girls. She is committed to making her mark in the world by leading the charge against political and social injustices. Tirelessly, she works to resolve and prevent the abuse, neglect and desperation that many face by taking on leadership roles in the Atlanta activist community. Focusing on an ever-expanding list of public health issues that includes HIV prevention, domestic violence, nutrition, and sexual trafficking; Banks spends both her days and nights ensuring the manifestation of her personal belief that “everyone deserves access to quality healthcare and a healthy life without regard to income or race.” She currently serves as Atlanta’s ambassador and national program manager for The Red Pump Project, a chartering member and co-chair of the health committee for the National Council of Negro Women Greater Atlanta Section, community ambassador for youthSpark, a board member of DeKalb County’s Juvenile Court Journey Program and a member of the For Her Giving Circle which focuses on domestic minor sex trafficking.

As an author, Banks uses writing in innovative ways to express her creativity and draw attention to social issues. Her articles and essays have been distributed through major media outlets including For Harriet, Sonic Eclectic and Mahogany Magazine.

Banks is well on her way to changing the world, and her impact has not gone unnoticed by her peers. She has been honored for her activism by the R.I.C.E. (Rising in Community Excellence) Awards, Dimensioned Wellness, nominated for The Trouble Maker Award in the spirit of Congressman John Lewis by the Center for Civic Innovation and has been listed on AfroElle’s Forty under Forty.
